DON'T WASTE THE ANESTHESIA!

Your pet will be going under general anesthesia, which affords an opportunity to perform procedures that may be more difficult when your pet is awake. Anesthesia is much safer now than in years past, so we recommend making the most of this event. Please initial any and all of the following procedures you would like performed while pet is under anesthesia.

1. Toenails can be trimmed much closer. Long toenails can be painful and contribute to lameness. They can become broken and infected if not trimmed regularly. In some cases a laser nail trim may be preferred, at an additional charge. _____(initials)

2. Ears can be flushed. Ear infections are common, and if not attended to, can be very uncomfortable and lead to serious ear conditions and/or surgery. _____ (initials)

3. Sanitary grooming can be performed at this time. This may not be easily done in an awake animal but can be easily performed under anesthesia. Fecal matter and Urine can cling to the fur (especially long hair) and can be breeding grounds for bacteria and fungal infections not to mention maggots in warm weather. A full grooming is not recommended at this time due to any potential complications. _____ (initials)

4. X-rays (i.e. those hips, elbow, and stifle radiographs), blood, stool, urine, and other samples can be easily acquired at this time. This is a great time to collect samples as long as the regular blood work is OK for anesthesia. _____(initials)

5. A Microchip can easily be placed to help you find your lost pet. _____ (initials)

Nail trim & microchip charges are discounted when done while pet is under sedation.

I have read all the above information and I understand and accept all the risk and responsibility involved. I also understand that unforeseen complications may occur which may incur additional charges.
